About National Board of Accreditation (NBA)

The National Board of Accreditation (NBA) is an autonomous body established by the All India Council for Technical Education (AICTE) in 1994 to ensure quality assurance in technical and professional education in India. NBA focuses on accrediting individual programs in disciplines such as engineering, management, pharmacy, and architecture. Its primary emphasis is on Outcome-Based Education (OBE), which assesses whether students achieve specific learning outcomes that align with industry and societal needs. NBA's accreditation process involves rigorous self-assessment, peer evaluation, and continuous improvement, encouraging institutions to enhance their academic practices. In 2014, NBA became a full member of the Washington Accord, enabling global recognition of its accredited engineering programs. This membership facilitates international mobility for Indian graduates and aligns Indian education with global standards. Through its transparent and robust evaluation framework, NBA plays a crucial role in promoting excellence, innovation, and accountability in technical education across the country.
